2.1.2. ii. configuring the game server in the options menu, you will see a section for multi-processor and you can see if its set to single processor. by default, the single processor setting would be in the on position. if you changed it to a dual core, you would then need to click on the right corner of the box to show that it was a dual core and then click on the off and then back on the on position.

2.1.3. iii. custom game setup in the bottom section of the game options, you will see the first and second part of the setup, which is custom and chosen for the multiplayer game. this part is more complicated than the single player game as it will require you to find the best settings for this game. it will help if you know what each part does, though the many options are initially a little overwhelming.

the history of the expansion pack warlords concerns us, a general who leads troops to fight against the gang: they are children of the 18th century (villains). but not just the warlords will show you how to fly hot air balloons, shooting arrows at people and killing a duck. the trailer is also talking about the game itself. the game will take place in an imaginary country that was discovered centuries ago, where the first man settled, the tree became a man, the moon became a terrible beast and the sun became a very fierce giant. the official message of the game goes as follows: "the game is based on the following concept: in the future all nations of the planet joined to one single country, the world. this time, however, the history of the world and all nations are heavily remodeled in the game. all world conflicts that have ever happened in the past are already resolved in the game. after all that, all the most intelligent and beautiful generals, along with their troops, retreated to a mysterious island in the sea. there, in secret, they have begun to build a new life, leaving the problems of the old world far behind them."

the peaceful process of leveling up on the island has begun, and no battle is too great, as well as no opponent too evil. to complicate things, a terrible creature from the dark waters, the enemy, is working to destroy the island and its inhabitants. all that need to happen, to protect the place, is the leadership of a great commander, who will lead an army of nearly 1000 people in battle. this is the moment of truth. the fate of all humanity is on your head."
