Field of the Invention This invention relates to a novel bidentate ligand and a process for preparing the same. More particularly, the invention relates to a bidentate ligand having a specific quaternary group, and a process for preparing the same, which exhibits high catalytic activity as well as high stability in the case of carrying out a chemical synthesis using the ligand as a reagent in the catalytic reaction. 2. Description of the Related Art The ligands used in the chemical synthesis of functional molecules can be classified into a mono-ligand type, a di-ligand type and a didentate type, which are mainly employed on an industrial scale. However, any of these is still disadvantageous in cost since it is difficult to provide a sufficient number of functional groups which can be utilized by a chemical synthesis. On the other hand, a didentate ligand, which can provide its 2 or more metal coordination sites in one molecule, is one of the most important reagents for the chemical synthesis. In the field of catalysis, however, there is no well-known didentate ligand which can provide 2 metal coordination sites within one molecule. With respect to a process for preparing the same, there is reported, for 04aeff104c
