I've tried all files in the same location, trying different jpeg 8 and 16, and the 32 bit files. It's not a corrupted image, as I can open them in imgquant with no visible issues. I'm able to open them using the Info Window, so it's something relocatable or possibly some sort of corrupt data. I'm running immediate search of all known bad data and I'm not finding anything. Anyone have any ideas? I used to have this problem (I think with PS CS7) where I would have a file open in Photoshop in immediate search and it would say "this file is not open, file is searchable". That was what led me to believe it was a corrupted file. Now I have had this problem for years with PS CC and... It's weird that this file was opening fine on my file system and in my PC. It's a PSD file with layers and I even checked it in a different version of Photoshop. It just won't open in CC, I've tried everything I can think of. I even started a new CC project and tried to open the file and it says "this file is not open, file is searchable". I've tried this with ten different files and tried to split them into one layer each. It's like Photoshop just doesn't want to open them anymore just like that. This comes after working on a very large file and using the maximum resolution. After working on it over the weekend, it started happening and I can't get it to work anymore. I tried Dealing with the image layers and using new layers, using older layers, etc. It's all the same. The image is clean and can open in Georeference it just won't open it source anymore. Any thoughts?
