Theresa May appears to have abandoned previous opposition to a second referendum, after a Cabinet minister said the Prime Minister now "fully supports" one. In a rare Tory attack on the Prime Minister, John Patten told the BBC that he no longer believed Mrs May was "uncomfortable" with a fresh ballot. He said Mr Johnson - the frontrunner to become PM - has "fully supported" the position that there should be a second vote, with Mrs May and other senior Conservatives calling for one. Asked whether the Prime Minister was opposed to it, Mr Patten, Mrs May's former head of policy, said: "She's not against the principle, but I think that she's comfortable as to whether the right choice is Remain or Leave." "I think I'd have the opposite view... that she's uncomfortable with the idea of a further referendum." Hormonal regulation of ovarian p21 (Trop2) gene expression in the rat. Trop2 is a multi-ligand transmembrane glycoprotein that is expressed in the ovary and can be detected in oocytes, granulosa cells and theca cells in adult rat ovaries follicles. Expression of this protein in the ovary during folliculogenesis has recently been reported and attributed to the oocytes, while the presence of the protein in the granulosa cells had not been demonstrated before. To clarify if the expression of the protein in the granulosa cells depends on the stimulation by gonadotropins, during folliculogenesis, we have compared the ovarian expression of this protein at different ages (5, 11 and 21 days) and in adult ovaries, using Western blot and immunohistochemical analysis. At 5 and 11 days, ovarian Trop2 expression was low, while at 21 days it was high and similar to adult rats. Western blot analysis of the ovaries of adult rat ovaries showed that there is a single band of an apparent molecular weight of 61-62 kDa. The immunoreactivity of adult rat ovaries showed Trop2 expression in the granulosa cells of antral follicles in the pvc.
