I've used the SPF record for the web interface to "be allowed" to send mail from my IP/domain (compared to the DMARC record which I have used for my DNS to "block" it). For some reason, this seems to be causing the mail to be delivered to the mail client, but not sent in the proper format. Any ideas on how to address this? I've tried to only use "sender_canonical" and "mailfrom:" without any luck. I'm not sure if this matters, but the webmail site is hosted at a VPS and the connector needs to send mail out from the server. A: This is actually a bit easier than I thought. Open the TCP/IP Properties dialog box on the server from the list of services on the server. Add a new IP Virtual Server. Bind it to the IP of your subnet (if you have a static IP, then no need to configure anything). Bind it to your domain name. Set the TOS to unrestricted, RFC 791 type, and the flags to 10 and 255. This basically says to allow traffic on all ports for all protocols as long as it's between the same IP addresses you're listening on. Set the default route to point to
