The whole point of a money belt is to keep your valuables safe by being inconspicuous. The only problem is that money belts are the opposite of inconspicuous. The second you put a few bills, and probably your passport inside, you look like a kangaroo. The other big problem I have with money belts is the lack of basic functionality. A money belt is designed to keep your cash and cards safe, but the way you use them (see above) makes your cash and cards obscenely visible. An RFID money belt protects its contents from the possibility of thieves scanning the RFID (radio frequency identification) chip on your passport and/or credit cards and therefore stealing your sensitive data. RFID protection can be built-in by using fabrics capable of blocking RFID scanners, or it can come in the form of separate RFID-blocking sleeves. If your belt includes the latter, you must place your cards and passport inside the sleeves before putting them in the belt. But these days, the way we travel, and the way we access money on the go, have changed. With ATMs available across most of the world, more reliable card and mobile payment networks, and constant connectivity thanks to our smartphones and mobile devices, the idea of a travel money belt may feel a bit antiquated. You can buy money belts at any Target or Walmart, in the luggage department. For that matter, any department store that sells luggage probably has a travel accessories area that has them. As for converters - I'm guessing you mean plug adapters? If your electronics are dual voltage, all you need is an adapter so that your plug fits in their outlets. I wouldn't rely on the hotel to have one. They only have what others have left behind. Adapters are inexpensive - just buy a couple here before you go. Amazon has cheap adapters (I think I paid less than $4). Mine is good for adapting to several types of plugs. Converters are more expensive but are available. Most electronics (computers, etc) don't need converters but be sure to look. Money belts, as someone said, can be bought at Target in the luggage section. REI at Southcenter has a lot of small travel bags and accessories and I'm pretty sure they have money-belts and converters. Also, the Bergman Luggage store in Southcenter also has money belts and converters. I think there's also a travel/luggage store at The Landing in Renton, I think they would have money-belts and converters. Be on guard in train stations, especially upon arrival, when you may be overburdened by luggage and overwhelmed by a new location. A petite bump and a slight nudge getting off the Metro in Paris and...wallet gone. That's exactly what happened to me. Take turns watching the bags with your travel partner. Don't absentmindedly set down a bag while you wait in line; stay in physical contact with your stuff. If you check your luggage, keep the claim ticket or locker key in your money belt; thieves know just where to go if they snare one of these. On the train, and especially on city transit, be hyper-alert at stops, when thieves can dash on and off with your bag. There probably aren't more thieves in Europe than in the US. We just notice them more because they target tourists. But remember, nearly all crimes suffered by tourists are nonviolent and avoidable. Be aware of the pitfalls of traveling, but relax and have fun. Limit your vulnerability rather than your travels. Dress them up or dress them down, the key to money belt style is safety. Keeping your belongings safe is always in fashion, and these concealed pouches are tucked away from the grabbing hands of pickpockets to bring you peace of mind while you roam. If you simply want to carry cash around with you, a small money belt will suffice. But if you want to keep your phone, passport, and any other essentials tucked away, too, opt for one that has different compartments to keep everything separated to make access quick and easy every time you need to use it. Looking exactly like a regular belt, the Zero Grid Travel Security Belt is so discreet that no one should suspect anything more. It even comes with a durable plastic buckle, meaning you can waltz through airport security without having to take it off. Made from top-grade nylon webbing and featuring a smooth-gliding YKK zipper, this belt should last you many years of travel, and it should draw zero interest from would-be criminals. Unisex and über-practical, this is the ultimate cash-only money belt that can be worn anywhere. An RFID-blocking inner liner adds another layer of protection against tech-savvy criminals trying to scan your credit cards, no matter how close they get to you. Another added benefit of this money belt is its $250 theft insurance and the Global Recovery Decals from ReturnMe, which will help you get lost items back anywhere in the world. This is the ultimate in RFID-blocking money belts. Good looking and easy to use, it is also RFIDsecure and contains individual compartments perfect for holding cash, important documents, and your phone. Avoid pickpockets as your valuables remain invisible and tucked away. This discreet money belt has an inner RFID-blocking barrier and is made from water-resistant, heavy-duty ripstop nylon. Its design makes it virtually invisible to thieves, allowing it to be hidden away inside your pants or under your jacket. Lightweight and easy to wear, the Alpha Keeper money belt features high-quality YKK zippers, a slim, sturdy buckle, and is made from soft material to make it skin-friendly and prevent uncomfortable heat and moisture. Made from heavy-duty nylon, this money belt will resist water, mold, and mildew to help prevent stinky odors. It comes with a breathable padded mesh backside that makes it just as comfortable to wear as its counterparts on this list. Easy and comfortable, this belt is designed for those who want to exercise while traveling. Made from a high-quality blend of spandex Lycra material, this belt is soft and stretchy enough to remain flexible as you move while securing your valuables. More similar to a regular wallet, this cool-looking clip wallet keeps your money and cards safe wherever you are. Made from ultra-strong nylon with a self-repairing zipper, this discreet travel wallet is perfect for hiding away under your clothes. Clip it to your belt or stash it in your pocket to prevent thieves from accessing your cash and cards while you travel. Discreet, lightweight, and with a useful inner compartment, this travel wallet is perfect for anyone who wants the security of a money belt without having to wear one. Passports, IDs, money, and cards can all be safely tucked away in this compact travel wallet pouch. Made from durable and lightweight ripstop nylon, this one is so comfortable, you may even forget you are wearing it. Built with longevity in mind, you should be able to take it anywhere in the world with you for many years to come. Money belts are one of the safest ways to protect your cash from pickpockets, as the money is kept hidden underneath or within the belt. Provided you are discreet when you access your cash, it should stay safe from pickpockets. Choosing between a neck or money belt will ultimately come down to your personal preference. Money belts are more discreet, but neck wallets are cheaper and can sometimes provide easier access to your personal items. Investing in a quality money belt is an easy, inexpensive solution to protecting your cash while traveling. Money belts not only improve your security, but also help you keep your money organized and give you a sense of comfort and security. Our team really liked the low and flat profile of this belt. They felt it offered the perfect compromise between the mega small traditional style belts and the larger money belts that are more like small bags. It easily sits flat with a passport and some money whilst remaining breathable and water resistant making it really comfortable to wear underneath clothing all day. Are you a compulsive jogger or trail runner even when you are traveling? Do you just want a secure stash pocket to wear when you are running at home? Stashbanz has come up with the ultimate running belt to meet your needs. You can really store a ton of stuff in this thing. If you are the kind of traveler that always seems to have a loaded wallet, a passport, phone, earbuds, hostel keys, debit cards, lip balm crammed into your pockets, this money belt might be the answer to your prayers. Our team were impressed by the versatility of this belt and liked that it was useful for more than just keeping their gear safe. In fact, they used it for jogging and bike rides on their travels too. They also liked that it was super low profile and light and rolled or folded really small. The Alpha Keeper money belt is made with three layers of 100% RFID blocking material to ensure your valuables stay safe. It is made out of high-quality water-resistant 210D rip-stop nylon toughness and durability on the road. If those three layers of RFID protection are not enough, the Alpha Keeper money belt also comes with seven protective sleeves, so you can add additional barriers to things like your phone, wallet, and passport even when you are not traveling (for example sleeping at the hostel). Our team loved the size of this money belt when it came to carrying more gear. Some of the team wanted to be able to carry a phone and other items like headphones alongside their cash and passports and this belt made that easy and comfortable without taking up a massive amount of room. It did show a little more than other as might be expected, but if you wear a baggy shirt or hoody over the top it still covers well. The belt is made from a high-quality blend of Spandex material that is soft as silk and it stretches well. This is the perfect belt for the people who are running in big cities either at home or whilst traveling. The Flipbelt travel belt is another unit designed for active people. The belt is made from spandex/lycra material. A big plus with the design is that there are no buckles to rub against your body, thus eliminating chaffing.
